TELEPHONES

*... for every use
... for convenience
... for beauty*

In the home . . . in the office . . . in the plant—wherever you have a telephone requirement, there's an instrument to do the job.

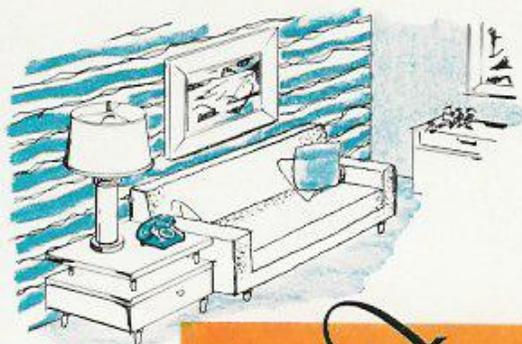

Today, the most widely used telephone is the one with the bell in the base. But if you have a specific telephone need, the telephone company has many other types of instruments to fill the bill. You can get the hang-up telephone for desks, or the wall type for the office, the kitchen, the hall, or other places where a telephone table is not practical.

COMBINATION TELEPHONES

These two are the most familiar telephones. They are suitable for most uses . . . contain all necessary apparatus, including bell.

LIGHT-UP DIAL. That round cap next to the number "4" shields a small bulb that lights up when the receiver is lifted. Excellent for bedrooms and sickrooms, the light-up set is useful to doctors, nurses, business people, and others who make many calls at night.

EXECUTIVE TELEPHONE

With this telephone you can talk and listen while the receiver remains in its cradle. Tiny but highly sensitive microphone in the base of the set picks voices up several feet from telephone. Miniature speaker, equipped with volume control, assures that you, or a group of people in your office, will hear the caller distinctly. Provides more freedom of movement during conversation and leaves hands free for reference to papers and writing. When receiver is lifted from cradle, these features are automatically cut off and telephone operates as regular set.
